Amid Mass Layoffs, This Nonprofit Is Hiring Now

— An employer of choice, Community Access offers an incentivized pay structure for frontline workers, a progressive culture, and robust benefits for staff at all levels. —

(New York, NY, 4/14/20) – As New Yorkers grapple with shuttered businesses and mass layoffs, workers deemed “essential” during the COVID-19 pandemic are busier than ever, and some of their employers are hiring.

Community Access, a nonprofit operating citywide, continues to deliver vital services to vulnerable New Yorkers and is currently hiring for 29 open positions.

Many of these roles offer on-the-job training and do not require prior experience in the field or advanced degrees. From newly unemployed restaurant workers, to Spanish language speakers, to those seeking a career change, Community Access offers fulfilling opportunities to people looking to make a difference, while helping to make New York City more compassionate and more just.

A human services nonprofit, Community Access expands opportunities for people living with mental health concerns to recover from trauma and discrimination through affordable housing, training, advocacy, and healing-focused services.

“At a time when so many New Yorkers face uncertainty and hardship, our doors are open and we’re proud to be hiring for a range of accessible positions,” says Nike Williams, chief people officer. “We’re on the front lines of dealing with the coronavirus outbreak, and our essential services are needed now more than ever.”

Current openings at Community Access include case manager roles, service coordinators, and front desk receptionists across the organization’s various housing sites, with most openings concentrated in the Bronx and Manhattan’s Lower East Side.
